It's worth noting, however, that neither of these books are particularly cheap. A more economical alternative would be to use internet-based language-learning software, such as Duolingo, to supplement and support their classwork.

They have (or should have) a white booklet from school entitled "My Italian GCSE: Key Tenses" that they can work through the exercises in. Alternatively, they can make use of the back-catalogue of past papers online. There aren't too many available for the post-2017 specification, but there are plenty of materials to support practice in listening and reading skills from the past papers of the previous specification. These can be found here:
